Our Season of Renewal

n nature, the season of rebirth and renewal is the spring, when we are energized by new life and the end of winter. Here at the Law School, our season of renewal comes each August, when a new group of students and new faculty and staff join us at Mizzou.

This fall's entering class of JD students is both different and very much the same when compared with our recent classes of first-year students. The similarities? These new students have done quite well in their prior academic studies (with a median undergraduate grade point average of 3.49), and they have devoted themselves to many pursuits and causes well beyond the classroom. As is the case every year, this year's new 1Ls include men and women who have served in the military, raised children, excelled athletically and volunteered in their colleges and communities to make this a better world.

The major difference between this year's entering class and prior classes is that we have been able to lower the size of the entering class from 150 to 135 new students. We have done this pursuant to the Law School Enhancement Plan that the University last spring agreed to fund for at least the next four years. This plan allows us to "right size" the Law School to better reflect the major retrenchment within the legal profession — both nationally and in Missouri. Indeed, a recent study concluded that Missouri is 10th in the nation with respect to the excess of new law graduates over anticipated new legal positions, and two other Missouri law schools are also reducing their entering classes to reflect this new employment reality.

The second major reason for this reduction in the size of our entering classes is to allow us to provide more practical experience for our students, which can best be done with smaller courses that allow for faculty supervision and feedback concerning actual lawyering tasks. In recent years we have added new courses with significant practice components and added practice components to existing courses. For instance, our students now intern with Mid-Missouri Legal Services, representing clients in landlord-tenant matters in Boone County, while other students draft litigation holds and preservation orders in our course in electronic discovery. In some of our real estate courses, students can receive an additional hour of credit by opting for a supplemental class in which they draft practice documents relating to the material they are learning in the "regular" course. With the reduction in our entering class sizes, and the smaller courses and lower student-faculty ratios that this will bring, we are planning to introduce even more such practice-oriented courses in the years ahead.

Not only do we have new classes of JD and LLM students, but several exciting new faculty and staff have joined us since last spring. As you will read in this issue of Transcript, the four tenure-track and three visiting faculty who join us this fall make our outstanding faculty even stronger. These men and women will have an immediate impact upon the Law School, and their influence – in our classrooms, across the nation and beyond – will grow in the years ahead.

As you'll also read in the pages that follow, we have enhanced our career services efforts through the hiring of some terrific administrators and staff, the addition of new career services programs and software, and the creation of a "smart suite" that employers can use to conduct video interviews of our students or talk with student law clerks from legal offices outside Mid-Missouri. These great new people and resources will help us to enhance our career services efforts both within our student body and with legal employers.

As I look forward to my final year as dean before returning to full-time teaching, I am excited about the changes and forward movement at the Law School. I encourage you to make a point this year to return to the Law School, attend one or more Dean's Tour or other alumni events, and otherwise follow our progress. Your support is crucial to our efforts, and I thank those of you who have been so generous in helping in so many ways.

The MU School of Law has been a great law school for almost 140 years because of the quality of its people. As we know from Ecclesiastes, "To everything there is a season." Building upon our historic strengths, we now are in a season of renewal and of change. It's an exciting time for all of us at the Law School, and I know that you will be just as excited as you see even greater progress in the years ahead.

Very truly yours,

Larry

Wilson Freyermuth

His ultimate reward is his interaction with students

ilson Freyermuth, the John D. Lawson Professor of Law, stays busy. He serves as the executive director of the Joint Editorial Board for Uniform Real Property Acts. He's co-authored popular texts in property and secured transactions and is currently working on a real estate finance treatise. He's chaired the Real Estate Transactions Section of the Association of American Law Schools. He's a fellow in the American College of Real Estate Lawyers. You can see that he's active in the profession – but Freyermuth's passion is teaching.

A recipient of both the prestigious Kemper Fellowship and the Curators Teaching Fellowship for excellence in teaching, Freyermuth says that his own experience in law school led him to a teaching career. "Let's just say that some of the teaching was uninspired, and I thought, 'I could do better than that,'" he explains. He's humble about the awards, saying that the real reward is the interaction with students and the moment when "you can see the light bulb go on over the student's head."

Freyermuth's abilities as a teacher are apparent through the words of his former students. "I never found a professor more dedicated to his students than Prof. Freyermuth," says Nikki Hininger Howell,'04. His commitment to students outside of class and his desire for students to understand the material have made Freyermuth a sought-after professor, and his students are loyal. "I rearranged my schedule several semesters just to take his classes," Hininger says. Ryan M. Turley, '08, says, "In my three years of law school, I had the pleasure of joining Prof. Freyermuth in almost every class he teaches."

These classes include property, real estate transactions, real estate finance and secured transactions. Freyermuth says that his writing and professional activities influence and improve his teaching abilities. In particular, he thinks that writing his property casebook, Property and Lawyering, "was something that was a fundamentally useful thing for my teaching. It took many years, and I'm grateful for the patience of all the students on whom I tried out the book as we drafted it."

Freyermuth also serves as chair of the Real Property Division Legal Education Committee for the American Bar Association's Real Property, Trust and Estate Law Section. In that role, he's currently working on a study to gather data about whether law schools are providing sufficient opportunities for students to study real estate law and develop real estate transactional skills. Freyermuth notes, "It's appropriate for an MU professor to be involved in this work, because MU has always had a legacy for having outstanding real estate teachers." He holds professors Dale Whitman and Grant Nelson, with whom he now collaborates on their treatise on real estate finance law, in particularly high regard. "I've been very blessed to be mentored by the two leading scholars of real estate finance law," he says.

Freyermuth notes that it was Whitman's decision to leave MU in 1992 that opened up a position on the MU faculty. Freyermuth was in transition from private practice with the Womble Carlyle firm in Raleigh, N.C., and had spent one year as a visiting professor at the University of Denver. He was looking for a place he could teach property and real estate, and also for a place with a college town feel. MU was a perfect fit, and both he and his family enjoy living in Columbia. "I mean, it's not Chapel Hill, North Carolina, but we like it here," jokes the University of North Carolina alum. His wife, Shari, is an assistant dean in the MU College of Agriculture, Food and Natural Resources. They have two children, Jacob (16) and Sarah (14).

A significant part of Freyermuth's professional service is his work with the Joint Editorial Board for Uniform Real Property Acts (JEB). The JEB is a national group of real estate experts that advises the Uniform Law Commission regarding real estate issues. As the executive director for the JEB, Freyermuth is responsible for setting the agenda for the JEB's semi-annual meetings, gathering background materials,

"It's appropriate for an MU professor to be involved in this work, because MU has always had a legacy for having outstanding real estate teachers."

"The market operated under unrealistic conditions for an awfully long time and created a bubble that's still deflating."

and drafting any proposals the JEB makes to the Uniform Law Commission for new uniform laws regarding real estate.

One of the issues that the JEB has studied over the last few years is private transfer fee covenants. Freyermuth has written several articles about the danger of such covenants, under which the owner of a home must pay a percentage of the home's purchase price to the developer every time the home is sold for a period of 99 years. He assisted in preparing a model statute banning the enforcement of such fees; within the past three years, 34 states have enacted the model statute or comparable legislation.

Freyermuth's study of property and real estate is especially pertinent in the current real estate crisis. He is concerned about the prevalence of real estate-related fraud such as "foreclosure rescue" scams designed to take advantage of persons desperate to avoid losing their homes to foreclosure. He doesn't see this climate changing anytime soon. "The market operated under unrealistic conditions for an awfully long time and created a bubble that's still deflating," he explains. He's optimistic, though, that eventually the market can rebuild in a "more fundamental and more reasonably functioning" way.

All of this work is typical for Freyermuth, who graduated with highest honors from Duke University School of Law. He holds a bachelor's degree in business from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and clerked for the late Hon. John D. Butzner for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in Richmond, Va. He has taught as a visitor at law schools at Duke, UNC, Washington University in St. Louis and the University of Denver, and at the Owen Graduate School of Management at Vanderbilt University.

At the School of Law, Freyermuth teaches property, real estate finance, real estate transactions and secured transactions n March 20, a group of 12 of the strongest supporters of the School of Law and their guests gathered at The Hay-Adams in Washington, D.C., to begin one of the most memorable trips of their lifetimes. These alumni and friends came to be sworn in at the Supreme Court of the United States. Dean Dessem moved the admission of the group in front of a full spectators gallery – and a bench of 9 very important justices.

The swearing-in was the highlight of a trip which included an informal appearance by Justice Elena Kagan, meals at some of Washington's power restaurants and a tour of the Newseum, an interactive experience featuring five centuries of news history, led by former director and Missouri School of Journalism alumna Peggy Engel.

An unscheduled bit of excitement occurred at The Hay-Adams, when guests of the trip encountered members of the Bush family in the hotel. President George H.W. Bush was honored by the Kennedy Center at the Points of Light Institute Tribute Event on March 21 for his "visionary leadership in the American service movement." The president and members of his family were staying at The Hay-Adams to attend this event, to the delight of the MU Law contingent!

FACULTY NOTES

S.I. Strong served as a visiting fellow at the University of Cambridge during the summer. While in Europe, she spoke at the University of Frankfurt and the University of Passu in Germany and at the Summer Academy for International Commercial Arbitration in Austria.

Strong recently published two articles, one in the Journal of Private International Law and the other in the ASA Bulletin, and saw the second edition of her casebook on English tort law released by Oxford University Press. She was awarded fellow status by the Chartered Institute of Arbitrators.

Ben Trachtenberg published "Health Inflation, Wealth Inflation, and the Discounting of Human Life" in the Oregon Law Review. In this article, he argues that, during cost-benefit analysis proceedings, federal regulatory agencies undervalue the benefit of saving human lives, causing an underregulation of environmental harms and other health hazards.

Trachtenberg also posted a short related article, "How Bad Math at Federal Agencies Undervalues Human Life," on RegBlog, a publication of the University of Pennsylvania Program on Regulation. WAMC Radio produced an "Academic Minute" episode about the article, which was featured on Inside Higher Ed.

Trachtenberg presented at a new scholars workshop at the Southeastern Association of Law Schools annual meeting, discussing his work in progress on criminal procedure.

Dean's Roundtable Program Connects Graduates with 1Ls

"I come away from each one with an ever greater respect for the character and quality of our graduates."

Every year, first-year students at the School of Law have a chance to gain valuable career advice from MU Law alumni in an intimate setting, with a very small group of classmates and the dean. Several times during each academic year, the dean invites alumni to join him at mentoring luncheons in the school's Rare Book Room.

"At these roundtables, the students receive very helpful recommendations from alumni on law school and legal practice and frequently ask, 'What should I do to create a practice like yours?,'" Dean Larry Dessem says. "These lunches are always great fun for me as well, and I come away from each one with an ever greater respect for the character and quality of our graduates."

Missouri Law Review Symposium:

Evolving the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and its Patent Law Jurisprudence

THE COURT OF APPEALS for the Federal Circuit approaches its 30th anniversary as the focal point of patent law policy in the United States. Many praise the court for its role in unifying and strengthening patent law doctrine. Others challenge the court's formalism and argue that a doctrine-specific solitary circuit leads to systematic failures in the development of the law.

In many ways, the court is operating in a power vacuum, with the U.S. Patent Office denied authority to substantively develop the law and Congress regularly withholding its guidance. Over the past few years, the Supreme Court has taken a more active role in deciding patent cases, but will that increased interest alter the jurisprudence of the Federal Circuit beyond the doctrinal holdings of the high court?

In February, the Missouri Law Review Symposium explored the ongoing role for the Federal Circuit as a developer of patent law policy, the structure of the court and its jurisprudential approach, the role of the court relative to other potential policymaking bodies, and the court's impact on innovation and in shaping the practice of law.

The symposium was moderated by Professor Dennis D. Crouch. Webcasts of all symposium panels are available at law. missouri.edu/faculty/symposium/2011/webcast.

Cyberbullying: Emerging Realities and Legal Challenges

A Tribute to Greg Scott

On Aug. 22, Prof. Greg Scott collapsed on his way to teach his first class of the year. Attempts to revive him were unsuccessful.

Almost immediately, condolences and memories were sent to the law school by students, alumni, former colleagues and members of the legal and Boy Scout communities. While the messages we received expressed sadness at the loss of this warm-hearted, generous person, most of them contained examples of Greg's legendary sense of humor.

Revered as a professor, admired as a Boy Scout leader and trusted as a friend, he will be missed.

WHAT A GIANT OF A

➤ "Greg Scott's passing is such a sad event. He was such a dear friend and such a great law professor.

Has there ever been a law professor who gave so much to his students? Most of us get distracted by the many legitimate duties we have outside the classroom, but the students were always first, last and everything in between for Greg.

Has there ever been someone so perfect to teach trial advocacy? Greg was superb at boiling down the craziness of trial practice into a form that newcomers could understand. When I teach trial advocacy, be it to students or experienced attorneys, the two experts I quote most often are Irving Younger and Greg Scott. That is pretty good company to keep.

Has there ever been someone who so enjoyed teaching at a law school? Greg was always ready to try something new if it would benefit the students. About five years ago, I told Greg about this crazy idea I had about creating history trials and asked if he would consider representing Meriwether Lewis with the student of his choice. 'That sounds like a lot of fun!' was his instant response. And he represented Capt. Lewis with creativity and verve.

What a giant of a man. What a hole he leaves in all of our lives."

—Dean Stephen D. Eason, former member of the MU Law faculty

➤ "My first experience with Greg Scott was during the open house that Mizzou Law hosts for prospective students. My husband and I drove in from Maryland to see what MU had to offer and we were leaving right after the events ended. At that time, MU was on my list of possible schools, but was not my first choice.

Then I sat through Prof. Scott's mock torts class – and I was sold. He was so, so smart and engaging, but also had me terrified that he would cold call on me. His whip-like wit brought us all in and made us pay attention to our first law school 'class.' I immediately returned to Maryland and sent my application. Prof. Scott changed my destiny that day.

Over my three years at law school, Prof. Scott was a constant and enduring mentor. He was not my advisor, but I called him for registration advice and other law school questions. He also quickly became a personal advisor as well.

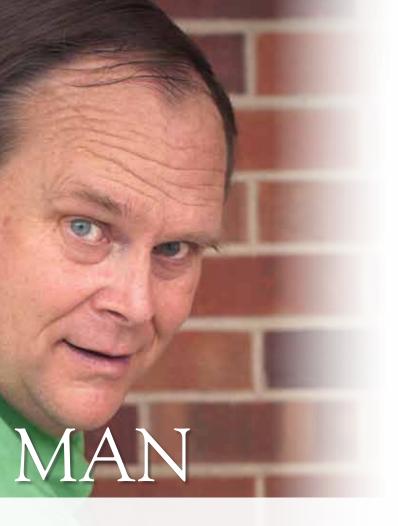

He was one of the best parts of being at MU Law and I will always miss knowing that he is there."

-Carolyn R. Hamilton, '10

"I remember the night of the big blizzard this year. I was so excited I couldn't sleep. Then, a legal research and writing-related e-mail appeared from Greg. It was one of the oodles of raucous e-lectures he would send as supplements to his students, graciously - a teacher to his core - blind-copying me so I could see how he approached a particular topic. I shot him a quick reply. And I sat by the window all night long, watching the snow grow heavier and wishing stupidly for blinding whiteness like you hear about in a novel or in a song, while Greg sat by his window across town, doing the same. We both could barely sit still. Every few minutes, another note. What's it like there? Did you find a good satellite map? Where should we go sledding? Are you going to build an igloo? Are we all worked up over nothing? As always and more than once that night, he made me laugh, shake my head, shake my finger, and say: 'SHAME on you, Professor Scott.'

This seems like such a bereft example, given how much he did for me. Greg was a true teacher, and gentle to his core. He was someone who encouraged you to share your inner child, with abandon. I hadn't had a friend like him since I was a child, and a piece of my heart broke when I heard the news. And yet I am so grateful I was able to share even a moment of his rich life."

—Rachel Heald, former member of the MU Law faculty

➤ "My family has very fond memories of a vacation with Greg. A year or two after Greg joined us at Swanson, Midgley, a group of my family and friends, eight total, went on a week-long sailing trip among the Grenadine Islands in the south Caribbean.

I vividly recall him wearing just his swim trunks, sitting at the bow of the boat reading a dime novel. A squall came up that would have impressed even [Hurricane] Katrina survivors and Greg did not flinch, bow rising and crashing, rain coming down in sheets, cold, wind. Greg just kept reading, paperback was soaked, the rest of us doubled over laughing in the safe, dry galley. Afterwards he comes down looking like a soaked St. Bernard and just said, 'This author is incredible. This storm comes up in the story and it's the most vivid, riveting description of anything I've ever read....'

We did a little scuba diving on the trip and Greg brought along the most ancient scuba gear I've ever seen in my life, the generation just after that used by Kirk Douglas in "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Being the consummate Boy Scout, he made it work of course, and was as competent a diver as there ever was, something he instructed in the Scouts

My family and friends are grieving his loss."

—Neil L. Johnson

➤ "I was an MBA student from 2004–2005 and had the opportunity to take a business law course starring (and I do mean starring) Prof. Scott.

This is an incredible loss. Prof. Scott clearly loved to teach and therefore his students loved to learn. He was committed to making sure every student walked away with a strong understanding of the concepts of business law, not just the facts. While those concepts are important, he also taught business students how to capture a room when facilitating, how to get input from those not proactively offering it and how to ensure that the knowledge needing to be transferred is done so efficiently. All of us in the business world are asked to 'teach' or facilitate (sell, present, etc.) at some point. I think we can all thank Prof. Scott for showing us how to be engaging and charismatic while ensuring the message we are sending is being received. Godspeed, Prof. Scott."

-Nate Kelly

➤ "Prof. Scott was the most influential instructor, at any level, that I have ever met. Using a theme of 'if you aren't having fun, you aren't doing it right,' he transformed students into not only improved legal writers, but also into better lawyers than they ever could have been but for him.

I ask you to imagine a frightened and intimidated first-year law student, sitting in her legal writing class. There is a knock at the door and Prof. Scott enters the room transformed into Bubba Scott, Prof. Scott's cousin. Bubba, a simple man wearing his best cowboy hat, has come to talk with the class, as each of us will be representing him in a lawsuit. Bubba speaks of his unfortunate incident with us, as his attorneys, and allows us to interview him about it. Little did we know that Bubba's unfortunate incident would become the basis for our legal writing assignment throughout the semester. Before his exit, and Prof. Scott's reappearance through the door (sans hat), Bubba gave us our first taste of real-life lawyering – and he made it fun.

Prof. Scott, however, labored far beyond the classroom, as he was available for students, quite literally, around the clock. He provided not only his e-mail, office hours and office telephone number to his students, but his personal home number as well. I used this personal number for countless hours as his student. His dedication and spirit of kindness to his students, and to his former students, was unparalleled and will be his legacy."

-Sarah E. Lawrence-Lohse, '03

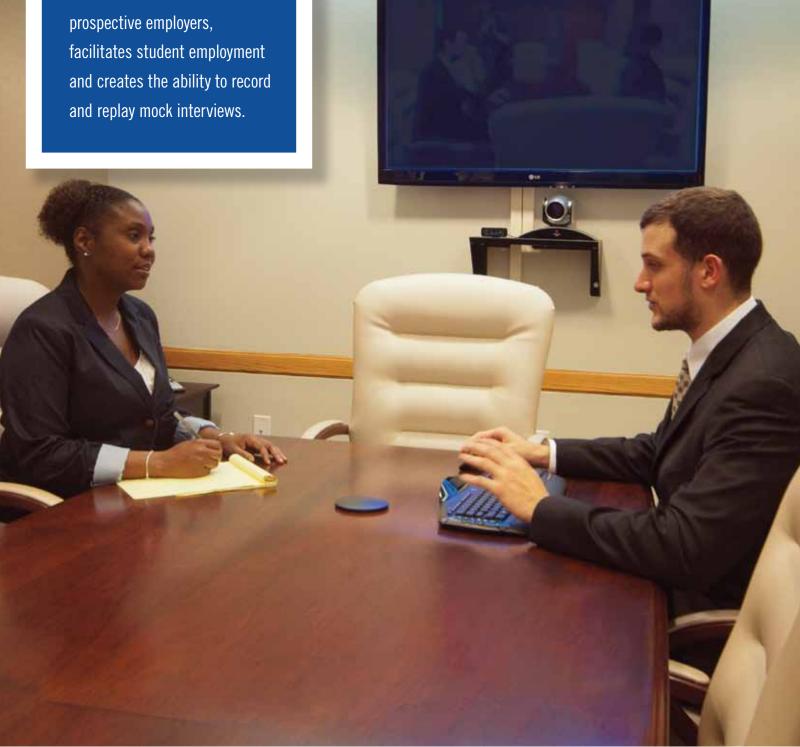

➤ "Prof. Scott was a terrific professor: dynamic, engaging, funny, practical and warm. As a law clerk this summer, I relied heavily on what he taught me. As I struggled to come up with the right answer to a legal research or writing problem, I'd figure it out merely by recalling issues he discussed with our class nearly two years earlier. That's how vivid and effective his lectures were. I could practically hear his booming voice as I tackled a research project. To me, he was the dominant part of the law school experience. For those of us lucky to have him as a professor, he taught us how to read and brief cases and then write about them — all in his own inimitable, funny style that made everything he discussed so memorable.

But above everything else, Prof. Scott was an incredibly kind and generous man. He was always – without fail – encouraging, supportive and helpful to everyone. I remember how he calmed all of us down as we approached our first midterm, reminding us that while it was important to study hard, how we did would not make or break us. He made law school fun and worthwhile. I'm going to miss him."

The season of energy and renewal at MU Law very year, fall is the season of change in academia. The MU campus goes from a peaceful, sleepy village to a bustling, crowded city, complete with parking dilemmas and traffic jams. A new class of students and faculty bring fresh outside perspectives and a new enthusiasm.

This year, the season of change expands beyond the routine. From class size and curriculum to career development and communications, change abounds. This year, we learned of a change in our leadership – that hasn't happened in a decade.

And so we bring the change to you in this issue of Transcript. If you'd like to let us know what you think, send us an e-mail (mulawalumni@missouri.edu).

Right-Sizing

When Dean Larry Dessem interviewed at the School of Law during the 2001-2002 academic year, the entering class size was 180. After his arrival, the class was strategically downsized to 150. For the 2011 entering class, we are downsizing again – to 135 students.

The reduction in student numbers is part of the Law School Enhancement Plan that will be funded by MU for the next four years. While students won't immediately notice any difference in Hulston Hall, the benefits are numerous. The decrease addresses the excess of new law graduates over anticipated new legal positions, aided by two of Missouri's other three law schools and their decreasing class sizes. It will decrease faculty-student ratio, leading to an introduction of even more practice-oriented courses.

In two years, the size of the student body will be reduced by approximately 45 students. This will allow the law school to serve the students better in many ways, particularly in Career Development, where the staff to student ratio will also be improved.

The reduction in class size doesn't come with a reduction in credentials – statistically the entering class numbers are similar to previous years.

"We are thrilled to have matriculated another high-achieving, well-rounded entering class," Director of Law School Admissions Michelle Heck says. Students come from a variety of backgrounds, from a wide array of institutions, with undergraduate degrees in everything from political science, physics and German to international business and biology. More than 42 students have double majors, while more than 15 have other graduate degrees. Some students matriculate directly from their undergraduate institutions, while others have served in the military, are married with children or are single parents, have had multiple careers or have lived abroad. According to Heck they have one thing in common – "They are ambitious, hard working, and excited to be a part of the MU Law family."

Curricular Changes

One common theme in feedback from alumni and the legal profession is the need for increased practical experience for our students. Lowering our entering class size means a lower faculty-student ratio, resulting in smaller courses with increased faculty supervision and feedback. Our goal is to give students more hands-on lawyering experience, much like our clinical programs already do. This includes representing clients in Boone County court and drafting both litigation and transactional legal documents in law school classes. We hope to expand our course offerings with strong practical component in the years to come, to even better prepare our students to practice law.

Simply doing things the way they have always been done is no longer an option.

Career Development: An Exciting and Challenging Time

Lisa E. Key Assistant Dean for Admissions, Career Development and Student Services © 573-882-2949 ⋈ keye@missouri.edu

IT IS AN EXCITING and challenging time to being stepping into my new role as assistant dean for admissions, career development and student services. Law school applications are down across the country, and the job market for new attorneys is tighter than it's been in recent history. If we wish to continue to attract well-qualified students and, upon graduation, assure those students have jobs commensurate with their training and career goals, simply doing things as they have always been done is not an option. This challenge provides a unique opportunity to revisit how the Career Development Office operates, and to employ new and innovative means of helping our students find employment. This process is still in its infancy, but I would like to share with you some of the new strategies we are implementing.

First, what used to be the jury room has been transformed into a virtual office. The office has been outfitted with a conference table and chairs, a dual-camera Polycom videoconferencing unit, a large plasma display, a computer with a Bluetooth keyboard and mouse and Skype capability, and a high definition webcam. This room will allow students to interview with prospective employers who are not able to come to campus, facilitate student employment during the school year with employers located outside Columbia, and create the ability to record and replay mock interviews.

Second, we are exploring ways to increase alumni involvement and mentoring with current law students in a number of ways. You, our alumni, are one of the School of Law's most valuable resources, and the success of these initiatives will depend largely on your willingness to become involved.

Last spring, we launched the MU School of Law Professional Network on LinkedIn, an online community designed for students, alumni, faculty and staff to network, share information and learn about ways to stay connected with each other and the law school. Already more than 340 members have joined.

We have also recently adopted an online information management system designed specifically for use by law school career services offices called Symplicity. Law students and alumni who are looking for employment will be able to search job postings based on individually specified criteria, such as practice area or geographic location. Users can upload documents to Symplicity, including cover letters, resumes and writing samples, and apply for jobs directly through the website. Symplicity will also allow us to track where our students are currently working or have worked in the past, and collect evaluations from them of their employment experiences.

We will also use Symplicity to create a database of our alumni that is significantly different from the database used by the School of Law's Office of Development and that will significantly enhance our ability to connect students with alumni based on their interests. Symplicity is configured to allow you to input information particularly relevant to our law students as they develop career plans and strategies.

If you are technology averse, but would like to be a part of this database, the staff in

With your permission, this information will be made available to students in a searchable format, and students will be able to contact you if they have questions or would like additional information. You will also have the opportunity to indicate your willingness to be a mentor and provide assistance to a limited number of students as they navigate the job search process and move into the legal profession. I encourage you to be a part of this database, be a mentor and make a difference in the life of a law student.

Professor Dessem

The biggest change that will occur in the next year is the search for a new dean, a process that hasn't happened in ten years. In July, Dean Dessem announced that he would step down from the deanship after serving for ten years as dean at MU Law.

No, he hasn't accepted another deanship. No, he's not retiring to go hiking around the globe. He's not even "returning" to the classroom, as he's taught civil procedure to law students each spring for the last nine years. So what is he doing? He's returning to full-time teaching after a 20 year hiatus – and he's excited about it!

MU will begin a national search to fill this important position this fall.

We Asked, You Responded!

This spring, the School of Law's Self-Study Committee distributed a survey to all alumni for whom the School of Law had valid e-mail addresses. The survey covered a variety of topics related to the school, such as level of preparation for entering the legal profession, the school's website, services offered to alumni and level of connectedness with the law school.

The survey response was strong, with more than 1,200 alumni participating. While the survey results were positive overall – 93.8 percent of alumni said they would recommend the law school to a prospective student – there is room for improvement. School of Law administrators will use survey responses to improve alumni relations, career development efforts, communications, the curriculum and co- and extra-curricular offerings.

The Self-Study Committee, led by Prof. Melody Richardson Daily, '86, was created to prepare for the School of Law's reaccreditation review by the American Bar Association and Association of American Law Schools. Each accredited law school undergoes a site visit by a team representing the ABA and AALS to determine its fitness for reaccreditation every seven years.

If you did not receive the alumni survey, it means that the alumni office does not have a current e-mail address on file for you. If you'd like to receive periodic updates from the School of Law, please provide your e-mail address to mulawalumni@missouri.edu or law.missouri.edu/alumni/update-form. Use of the e-mail list is limited and addresses will not be sold.

Keeping You Connected

This summer, we made some changes at the School of Law to improve the way we communicate with you.

Casey Baker, director of external relations, was asked to assume responsibility for school-wide communications, including oversight of print publications, the school website and social media. Before this change, we did not have a staff member dedicated to managing web content and social media. Centralizing these duties will allow us to do a better job of telling our story to the constituencies that matter most – alumni, donors, prospective and current students, and the legal profession.

Previously, Baker's primary job duties were focused on alumni relations and development, including alumni events and publications.

This summer, we unveiled a new website design at law.missouri.edu. The goals for the redesigned site were easier navigation and a cleaner and more modern look. We also changed the way we handle social media. Our Facebook and Twitter accounts are now more active and a new LinkedIn account will allow you to maintain your MU Law network in cyberspace. Like us, follow us, join our network! Visit our website for easy access to these great sources of current information.

Your input is important! Let us know if there's something we can do better by contacting Casey Baker at bakercd@missouri.edu or 573-884-7833.

FAMILY VIOLENCE CLINIC: MIRACLE MISSOURI ADOPTION

A happy day for the Family Violence Clinic and one Missouri family – the day an adoption was finalized. Family Violence Clinic director Mary Beck and Judge Leslie A. Schneider, '79, join the family and then-students Chinerem U. Chukwu, '11, (far right) and Jill D. Parks, '11, (second from left) at the Boone County Courthouse.

MU LAW Family Violence Clinic students routinely participate in community projects, including drafting bills for legislatures in New Jersey, Hawaii, Oregon, South Dakota, Alaska and Vermont. As a student, Elizabeth A. Russell, '11, drafted such legislation and testified before the South Dakota judiciary committee. She also completed an internship with the Congressional Coalition on Adoption Institute in Washington, D.C., last summer and continues to do adoption related research supporting SB 939/HB 6298.

Clinic participants Linda Man, '11; Garnett T. Mathews Campbell, '11; 3L David Ma; Chinemerem U. Chukwu, '11; and Jill D. Parks, '11, completed the Missouri adoption of an African infant born with a genetic disorder, Robinow Syndrome, that nearly claimed his life in his home country.

The child's biological parents located the Robinow Syndrome Foundation and an associated Belgium research team via the internet and ultimately traveled to Minnesota for specialized health care. Upon realizing that their baby could only survive with sophisticated stateside health care, they located a couple in Missouri who enthusiastically agreed to adopt the African baby.

Clinic students conducted extensive research into federal and state laws affecting adoption and immigration as well as financial issues, before completing the adoption to the rural Missouri family. Multi-state physicians provide health care free of charge. The baby now has a brother who also has Robinow Syndrome.

The baby's Missouri and African families and the clinic students conducting the adoption stayed in contact frequently by e-mail and Skype. The two families recently celebrated the baby's first birthday via the internet, singing "Happy Birthday" in different languages. Multicultural law students, interstate medical professionals and cross national families came together using technology, within and across continents, to solve a problem for a baby and came away changed people.

LLM Program Welcomes New Director

L-R: Administrative Assistant Laura Coleman, Program Director Paul Ladehoff and Karen Neylon, program coordinator

PROFESSOR JOHN LANDE has served as director of the School of Law's master of laws (LLM) in dispute resolution program since 2000. This innovative program, the first of its kind in the nation, provides a unique opportunity to gain a deeper understanding of theoretical, policy and practice issues in the dispute resolution field.

Under Lande's leadership, the program has attracted attorneys from across the nation and all over world, who come to the School of Law to study with the nationally-acclaimed faculty members of our Center for the Study of Dispute Resolution (CSDR). After 11 successful years as director, Lande is stepping down from his administrative role. He continues to teach LLM courses, including the dispute system design course this semester.

The new director of the LLM Program is Paul Ladehoff, who has served as training coordinator for the CSDR and director of the MU Campus Mediation Service for seven years. Ladehoff teaches mediation at the School of Law and a course on group dynamics and conflict resolution for the MU Harry S Truman School of Public Affairs.

Ladehoff graduated with honors from the University of Nebraska College of Law; served as a trial attorney for the U.S. Department of Justice, Environment and Natural Resources Division; and directed several community-based mediation centers in Nebraska. He maintains many of his current duties – most notably his service as director of the Campus Mediation Service – while taking over the leadership of the LLM Program.

"This transition is a natural opportunity to take stock and think about any changes or new opportunities that could make this great program even better," Ladehoff says. "I would welcome hearing comments and suggestions from alumni and friends of the School of Law." Ladehoff can be reached at ladehoffp@missouri.edu or 573-884-7813.

Historical and Theatrical Trials Society

IN FEBRUARY, the Historical and Theatrical Trials Society featured a new kind of character in its annual trial. Rather than use an actual historical figure as the defendant, as previous trials have done with Lewis and Clark, Al Capone and Missouri Gov. Thomas Crittenden, this year's character was from literature.

"Creating Life and Death: The Trial of Dr. Victor Frankenstein" showcased the trail of Dr. Victor Frankenstein for the wrongful death of his assistant, Igor, who was murdered by Frankenstein's monstrous creation. The trail raised the question: Is Dr. Frankenstein responsible for the actions of his creation or should this "creature" be considered a human adult that is solely responsible for its own behavior?

HATTS is a group of students and faculty dedicated to exploring the intersection of law, history and theatre. Each year, members organize a trial that could have happened but didn't, involving members of the law school, Columbia and legal communities, who bring the subject matter to life by dressing in costume.

Student Bar Association

THE 7TH ANNUAL Tim Heinsz Memorial 5K Run/Walk and First Jim Devine Memorial Dog Walk was held in April, raising more than $23,000 to benefit the Timothy J. Heinsz Scholarship Fund at the School of Law. Make plans now to join us for next year's run/walk, to be held on April 21.

Women's Law Association

EAGH YEAR, the Women's Law Association holds an auction, the proceeds of which benefit causes important to members of the group. This year, beneficiaries included the School of Law Family Violence Clinic, WLA Public Service Scholarship and Happiness for Health, a program started at MU Children's Hospital by Prof. Doug Abrams to provide toys, games and parties to hospitalized children. Last spring, WLA members Katie A. Hardt, '11, and Lindsay A. Ponce, '11, presented a ceremonial check to the MU Children's Hospital mascot, TJ, representing money raised for the Happiness for Health fund.

FACULTY NOTES

Wilson Freyermuth was reappointed chair of the American Bar Association's Real Property Division Legal Education Committee for 2011-2012. He continues to write and speak on the subject of private transfer fee covenants (including a CLE program sponsored by the American College of Real Estate Lawyers); during the past year, an additional 18 states have adopted statutes banning the enforcement of such covenants, bringing the total to 34 states adopting such bans.

Freyermuth's recent article "Does a Federal Tax Lien Take Priority over a Mortgagee's Lien on Rents: Bloomfield State Bank v. United States" appeared in the September/October 2011 issue of Probate & Property. He also serves as an observer to a Uniform Law Commission study committee on relocation of easements.

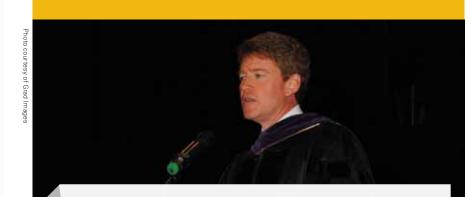

Carli N. Conklin gave a talk on the historical meaning of "the pursuit of happiness" in the Declaration of Independence to the Regent University Undergraduate College. In her talk, she stated that while "the pursuit of happiness" has a variety of meanings today, its placement and meaning in the Declaration are best understood when the phrase is viewed within an 18th Century legal, scientific, religious and philosophical context. While at Regent, Conklin also presented a lecture, "Cold War Rhetoric and the Language of Liberty," to a class of students in the Department of Government, History and Criminal Justice.

Conklin is currently completing her doctoral dissertation on "the pursuit of happiness" through the University of Virginia.

Koster Addresses May Graduates

CHRISTOPHER A. KOSTER, '91, the 41st attorney general of the State of Missouri, served as the 2011 commencement speaker for the School of Law. He told his story of life in politics, of changing political parties while serving in the Missouri Senate, and shared this encouragement about the impact of an MU Law education:

You're going to find that you made a great decision to become a lawyer, and the career that is about to unfold in front of you will forever be enhanced by the work you've completed here today. The practice of our profession remains, now and forever, the cornerstone of this modern world. Everything in our society, every business, every contract, every relationship, the protection of every right guaranteed and the aspiration of every right yet achieved, is founded on the principals you learned here. Whether you practice law, enter business, become an entrepreneur or — God forbid — a politician, you're going to find that this place changed you, has made you sharper, and prepared you for the world in ways you can't even yet perceive. The first thing I want to say is that 40 years from now, every single one of you will say that getting this law degree was one of the best and most important decisions of your life.

Before becoming attorney general, Koster represented the 31st district in the Missouri Senate and was the prosecuting attorney for Cass County, Mo. He received his undergraduate and law degrees from MU and an MBA from Washington University in St. Louis.

Rule Receives Teaching Award

TROY A. RULE, associate professor of law, received the 2011 Gold Chalk Award from the MU Graduate Professional Council. The award is presented to graduate/professional school professors who have made significant contributions to the education and training of graduate and professional students. Recipients are nominated by students in their respective schools.

At the School of Law, Rule teaches land use, secured transactions, sales & leases, and real estate transactions.

The Law Society Celebrates 27 Years

n March, the School of Law celebrated 27 years of The Law Society and its members with a reception and dinner at the Clubhouse on Baltimore in Kansas City. The evening's highlight was the recognition of new and newly-elevated members, listed at right with their areas of support.

Since its inception in 1984, The Law Society has welcomed 257 members. This year's honorees represent $330,000 in gifts and pledges to the School of Law.

Special thanks to the evening's sponsors

2011 Class Pledge Drive

In keeping with tradition, members of the Class Pledge Drive Steering Committee asked their classmates to make gifts or pledges to the School of Law during their last semester of law school. Classmates could choose any area of support, with gift designations including scholarships, faculty research and student organizations.

The Class of 2011, despite facing a difficult employment market, raised $10,465.12. This brings the total raised by third-year law students to more than $198,000 since 1989.

The following members of the Class of 2011 made gifts or pledges as part of this fundraising effort. Names with asterisks indicate those who served on the steering committee, led by Mary Cile Glover-Rogers, Ty Z. Harden and Katie Jo Wheeler.

The Law Society Dinner St. Louis

TBD INFO 573-882-4374

At least 50 percent or 100 percent of MU Law graduates in their firms have given to the School of Law during the fiscal year ending June 30. Will your firm head to the big dance like these firms? Bring each team member onto the hardwood by June 30, 2012, and join the list of firms who have reached 100 percent participation to benefit the School of Law.

Any law firm with at least five MU Law alumni is invited to go on the court. At least one team captain is needed, to encourage colleagues to make gifts to the School of Law each year.

All gifts, regardless of the law school fund designation, will count toward the firm's score. Participating firms will be recognized in the fall 2012 issue of Transcript, where those reaching 50, 75 and 100 percent participation will be listed.
