What is a Scholarship Repository?

The University of Missouri School of Law Scholarship Repository is a freely accessible, online database for the scholarship of the Law School, including faculty publications, law journals published by students, and more.

The Scholarship Repository is actively indexed by Google making the scholarship of our school visible globally.

Open access scholarship unlocks the doors between our scholarship and the needs of the world.

Scholarship Repository

A Service of the University of Missouri School of Law Library

The Law Library provides the support of the Scholarship Library as a service to the Law School. On behalf of the school, the Law Library will manage:

- Copyright requests to journals
- Copyright requests to authors and second authors
- Upload scholarship to the repository
- Provide usage reports to faculty on the downloads generated by their scholarship
- Answer open-access and copyright questions

The Vision

The University of Missouri School of Law Scholarship Repository seeks to provide open access to scholarship, research and culture created at the Law School. We do this in order to raise the visibility of the excellent work being produced by our faculty, staff and students.

University of Missouri School of Law

Currently, the Scholarship Repository hosts the full text of the academic publications of our faculty for which we have received permission from the author and for which we have cleared copyright. For the items that don't yet have copyright permission, we have provided basic information about the article. In addition, we have loaded the full-text of the archives of The Missouri Law Review and The Journal of Dispute Resolution.

Moving Forward

Future Phases for the Repository

Faculty publications: Add professional journal articles for faculty, continue adding academic works, investigate possibilities of adding books, chapters and essays published by faculty.

Journals: Add The Missouri Bulletin and negotiate adding The Journal of Environmental and Sustainability Law with the Missouri Bar Association. We also want to invite student publications to discuss publishing journals electronically on this platform.

Student publications: Highlight prize-winning student publications.

Symposia: Archive symposia presentations.

Law School Archives: Select and add images and text from the University of Missouri School of Law Archives in support of the mission of the Law School, particularly where it will aid in scholarship or Development activities.

Working Together

Working together to expand the reach of your research

Faculty and students can work with us to expand the reach of the Scholarship Repository in several ways. First, retain key rights when signing copyright agreements. See the resources for authors at <http://www.sparc.arl.org/resources/authors/addendum>. Second, choose journals that have liberal open-access policies. Third, work with us to keep the Scholarship Repository fresh. Let us know when you have new publications!
