I. STATE LEGISLATIVE FOCUS

A. Binding Arbitration Required for Municipalities in Kansas

Bill Number: Kansas House Bill 2631
Summary: This bill would offer any individual with a contract or tort claim against a municipality to initiate binding arbitration proceedings against the municipality as an alternative to filing a lawsuit.

1. Introduction

The purpose of this Bill is to provide an alternative approach for individuals with a cause of action against a municipality.¹ Rather than the costly and time-consuming traditional method of hiring an attorney and filing a lawsuit, House Bill 2631 offers individuals an opportunity for Alternative Dispute Resolution ("ADR") in the form of arbitration.² The Bill would allow any individual with a claim in contract or tort against a municipality to require the municipality to submit to the arbitration of the claim.³

The purpose of House Bill 2631 is to facilitate the resolution of individual claims against a city.⁴ However, a fundamental principle of arbitration is that it is a matter of contract, and no party should be forced into the arbitration of a claim which they have not agreed to arbitrate.⁵

2. The Bill

This Bill would allow individuals to seek arbitration of contract and tort claims against a municipality. The exact wording of the Bill states that individuals "may require the municipality submit to arbitration of such claim." With this wording, the Bill seems to imply that a municipality may be forced into arbitration without an arbitration agreement.

However, the remainder of the Bill sets out the details of a potential arbitration proceeding, and the language closely resembles that of the American Arbitration Association’s ("AAA") standard arbitration clause.

The Bill requires arbitration according to the rules of the AAA with the appointment of a mutually acceptable arbitrator. If a single acceptable arbitrator cannot be found, the Bill calls for the typical process—each party appointing one arbitrator and the two individual arbitrators choosing a third arbitrator.

Additionally, the Bill requires arbitration to take place at a central or mutually agreeable location, and requires that all relevant documents and materials be made available to the other party no more than thirty days after notice of arbitration is served.

The Bill provides that an arbitrator may order a municipality to pay compensation or damages to an individual, but does not permit the award of punitive damages. The Bill also gives the arbitrator the authority to issue mandatory orders and restraining orders. In its conclusion, the Bill states that all arbitration awards are final and binding and all arbitration costs are to be paid solely by the municipality involved.

The author and supporter of House Bill 2631, State Representative Anthony Brown, suggested an amendment to the Bill during a committee meeting of the House Elections and Governmental Organization Committee on Feb. 7, 2008. The proposed amendment would require individuals seeking arbitration to submit a written explanation of their claim and formally request arbitration within one year of the event creating the cause of action.

3. Support and Opposition

In support of House Bill 2631, Representative Brown exemplified the limitations for individuals who face conflict with municipalities. Brown used Viola Brown, a Kansas resident who owns a small farm, as an example of someone who might benefit from implementation of the Bill. The city of Eudora, where Viola lives, is expanding rapidly; as a result of the expansion, increased water flows through a creek on Viola’s property. Along with the water, trash and debris wash up on her property. Brown highlights the fact that Viola’s only option is to take on the daunting task of suing the city. With the passage of House Bill 2631, she would have the option of entering arbitration against the city, a potentially quicker and more efficient process than trial.

At the same committee meeting on Feb. 7, several conferees spoke in opposition to the Bill. The first objection to the Bill was that it would prevent judicial review of an arbitrator’s decision and would give arbitrators too much power by allowing them to issue mandatory orders and restraining orders. Another serious concern about the Bill is that it would allow anyone with a claim to choose arbitration and force the city to pay for such arbitration. Opponents fear this will lead to filing of frivolous claims and waste tax dollars.

Eric Sartorious, assistant city manager and director of external affairs for Overland Park, Kansas, noted that nothing in current law prevents two parties from agreeing, of their own volition, to enter into arbitration to settle their disputes. He said he believed that House Bill 2631 would “needlessly increase the cost of government” by forcing the city to accept responsibility for all costs associated with an arbitration proceeding.

Finally, in a letter to the Chairperson of the House Committee on Elections and Governmental Organization, Duane A. Goossen, director of the Kansas Division of Budget stated that the Bill “would affect the cities of Kansas by requiring them to pay the full costs of arbitration, regardless of the outcome of the matter or the validity of the claim.”

4. Conclusion

House Bill 2631 is an attempt to streamline the dispute resolution process between individuals and municipalities. However, there are several fundamental flaws in the proposed Bill as written.

It appears from the language of the Bill that it offers individuals the opportunity to force a municipality to arbitrate a claim. Because of the consensual nature of arbitration, the language in the Bill may need to be altered so individuals have the opportunity to seek arbitration, but cannot require a municipality to arbitrate a claim.

Additionally, it is unlikely that this Bill will become law as it is currently written because of the strong opposition to its requirement that municipalities pay all the costs of arbitration. According to the AAA’s Commercial Arbitration Rules, each party should bear the cost of arbitration equally. House Bill 2631 states that arbitrations between individuals and municipalities should proceed according to the rules of the AAA. Therefore, if the Bill simply followed those rules, the controversy over shifting costs would be eliminated.

B. Required Mediation of Tort Disputes in Mississippi

Bill Number: Mississippi House Bill 326
Summary: This Bill would require the submission of all tort disputes to mandatory mediation before any civil suit may be filed. The Bill also provides that the statute of limitations period shall be suspended upon notice of a tort claim until mediation proceedings have ended.

1. Introduction

Mississippi House Bill 326 had lofty goals. It took a headstrong approach to promote dispute resolution methods as alternatives to trial. However, the Bill’s attempt to force mediation prior to the filing of tort suits ignored the already satisfactory Mississippi Court Annexed Mediation Rules and threatened to upset the known and accepted legal process in Mississippi. The flawed nature of this Bill led to its death in committee on Feb. 19, 2008.

32. Id.
33. DOMKE, supra note 5.
34. H.R. 2631, supra note 1.
36. H.R. 2631, supra note 1.
2. The Bill

The Bill had four major components divided into two sections. The first component concerned the required mediation itself and the qualifications of mediators. The Bill began by clearly stating its intent for all parties to a tort dispute to submit to mandatory mediation before any civil suit may be filed. Then, the Bill stated that mediators must be members of and certified by the Mississippi Bar and must have actively practiced law for a minimum of five years in order to hear disputes. These qualifications are not mentioned in the Court Annexed Mediation Rules.

The next component of the Bill involved the practical ramifications of required mediation and addressed how the statutes of limitations would be affected by such a requirement. Obviously, if tort claims are required to be mediated before a civil suit can take place, time will pass between the development of the cause of action and the appropriate time for trial. This will undoubtedly affect any statute of limitations already in effect. Rather than proposing a change or extension of any current statute of limitations, the Bill proposed a suspension of any applicable statute of limitations until mediation proceedings had been completed.

The third component of the Bill discussed the basic requirements of the mediation process, including when suit may be filed after mediation and notice requirements. The Bill stated that mediation should be informal, relaxed, and non-binding unless the parties agreed otherwise. The Bill also stated that a civil action could not be filed until ninety days after the mediation process was complete, and the Bill listed all the information that must be included in every notice of claim.

Finally, the fourth component of the Bill was a statement of construction and purpose. The Bill was to be construed liberally and not to be seen as usurping the power of the courts to render awards.

3. Support and Opposition

The clearly stated purpose of House Bill 326 was, "the encouragement of the settlement of disputes and the prevention of litigation." The dispute resolution process is meant to be consensual, and forcing people to participate in mediation may prevent some litigation, but at a large social and economic cost. A large cost in that forced mediation would greatly increase the number of mediation proceedings, but the Bill did not address a method for payment of the costs associated with all the additional mediation proceedings. Parties could be dissuaded by the cost and effort of mediation and therefore not attempt to bring their claim at all. However, this would not dissuade all claims and those who proceeded with their claims would still face added costs. Additionally, forcing people to participate in mediation would mean that they might not take the process seriously. They may rush through the process, viewing it as a burdensome obstacle before they can have their day in court. Finally, the proposed method of suspending any pertinent statutes of limitations may seem to work conceptually, but could lead to increased litigation about statutes of limitations issues and upset the balance of the law.

The Bill had a solid and honorable purpose of encouraging the use of dispute resolution. One positive portion of the Bill worthy of support was the mediator qualifications outlined early in the Bill.52 These qualifications would increase fairness and balance in the mediation process, as well as lead to a wider public acceptance of the process.

4. Conclusion

The mediation process is widely available in the state of Mississippi. According to the Court Annexed Mediation Rules, a court may order parties to enter into mediation proceedings, and the parties themselves may opt to participate consensually in the mediation process.53 It appears that House Bill 326 was an attempt to fix what was not already broken. Forced mediation leads to increased costs, less credibility, and reduced respect for the process of mediation. Additionally, the Bill’s effect on the statutes of limitations would have been overwhelming. House Bill 326 attempted to disrupt too much of the established legal practices, and for the aforementioned reasons it failed.

1. Introduction

Since 2005, mortgage delinquencies and foreclosures have increased dramatically, particularly among high-risk, high-cost, and subprime mortgages. Approximately 1.5 million foreclosures were instituted in 2007 alone. This foreclosure crisis has led state legislatures to note, "[a]busive mortgage lending has become an increasing problem . . . exacerbating the loss of equity in homes and causing the number of foreclosures to increase in recent years." In addition to an increase of homes in foreclosure, the crisis has also caused home values to decline. As home prices plummeted, local and state tax collections which generate a substantial amount of revenue and income through property taxes, have also felt the economic crunch. In addition, the economic woes created by the failing housing market have now reached national and global magnitudes. "The roots of the current [economic] crisis can be traced to lax lending for home mortgages — especially subprime loans given to borrowers with tarnished credit — during the housing boom." Economists hypothesize that when lenders approved subprime mortgages they were counting on home values to increase. When this did not occur, foreclosures drastically increased as homeowners held mortgages larger than the value of their home. "As financial companies racked up multibillion-dollar losses on soured mortgage investments, and credit problems spread globally, firms hoarded cash and clamped down on lending. This crimped consumer and business spending, dragging down the national economy — a vicious cycle policymakers have been trying to break." Homeowners and consumers looked to local and federal governments both for assistance. Unfortunately, "[t]here is no simple solution to this unprecedented set of circumstances. Congress, the administration, state and local governments all have attempted to respond through a myriad of proposals, programs and agreements." While Congress and the Federal Reserve focus on the national economy, the recent subprime mortgage and foreclosure crisis has led many state legislatures to re-examine their current laws and legislation on the topic. In the process, some states have introduced legislation responding to the crisis. Several of these legislative solutions incorporate ADR procedures to alleviate the financial hardships on consumers.

These bills adopt a variety of solutions including mediation programs, repealing mandatory arbitration provisions in subprime mortgages, and instituting mandatory settlement conferences as a part of the foreclosure process.

2. Instituting a Ninety-Day Mediation Program to Provide Alternative Solutions to Foreclosure: Michigan House Bill 6236

Michigan House Bill 6236 was introduced by Representative Bettie Scott on June 12, 2008.67 The Bill proposed to amend the Revised Judicature Act of 196168 by lengthening foreclosure proceedings for consumers and homeowners.69 The Bill would create a ninety-day mediation program in conjunction with a one-year moratorium for mortgage foreclosures.70

The ninety-day mediation program consists of a variety of steps. First, a mortgage lender can only send notice of foreclosure sixty days after a borrower becomes delinquent on payment.71 Following receipt of notice of foreclosure, the borrower has thirty days to attempt to resolve the delinquency by restructuring the loan payment schedule or meeting with a credit-counseling agency to formulate a solution to the delinquency. If the borrower chooses to do neither of these options, the action for foreclosure can proceed thirty-three days after notice was given.72

Subsection (6) of the act would retroactively apply the Bill’s provisions to foreclosures on residential property filed before the effective date of the act.73 Subsection (6) would not apply if the property has already been sold for judgment.74

The Bill places limits on the application of the procedure. Notice of foreclosure is not required if: (1) the borrower is more than twenty-four consecutive months in arrears; (2) the total amount due under the mortgage is more than $60,000; or (3) if the borrower has already received notice from another lender regarding the foreclosure of the property.75

The Bill also instates a one-year moratorium on home foreclosures. The moratorium would begin on the Bill’s effective date and would also retroactively apply to borrowers who have received notice of the foreclosure, but whose property has not yet sold.76

Following introduction, the Bill was transferred to the Committee on Banking and Financial Services on June 12, 2008, where it remains.

Representative Warren McBride introduced Mississippi House Bill 743, entitled the Home Loan Protection Act, on February 4, 2008. The Bill was promptly transferred to the Committee on Banking and Financial Services. The Bill was directed at "high-cost" home loans that have led to the current mortgage foreclosure crisis. The legislature focused on this type of loan because "[t]he financing of high points and fees causes the loss of precious equity in each refinancing and often leads to foreclosure." The act would have broadly restricted several aspects of the mortgage foreclosure process, including the ability of creditors to accelerate indebtedness; the amount of fees that can be assessed when homeowners pay off their mortgage balance early; and the application of "balloon" payments.

The act also would have restricted the application of arbitration clauses in such loans. Subsection (10) of the act specified: "No high-cost home loan may be subject to a mandatory arbitration clause that limits in any way the right of the borrower to seek relief through the judicial process for any or all claims and defenses the borrower may have." In summation, the act would have provided that violations of its provisions "constitutes an unfair or deceptive trade practice." The Bill died in committee on Feb. 19, 2008.

4. Mandatory Settlement Conferences to Generate Alternatives to Foreclosure: New York Senate Bill 8143

New York Senate Bill 8143, entitled The Real Property Actions and Proceedings Law, was signed into law on Aug. 5, 2008. The Bill was originally introduced on May 2, 2008.

The language of New York's law is very similar to that of the proposed Michigan bill with relation to the ninety-day mediation program. New York's bill, like the Michigan bill, allows the delinquent borrower at least ninety days to meet with a credit-counseling agency to discuss alternatives including lower monthly payments, or an altered payment schedule.

New York's bill differs from Michigan's bill, however, in that Rule 3408 of New York's bill also provides for a mandatory settlement conference in all residential foreclosure actions involving high-cost home loans, subprime, or nontraditional home loans.\textsuperscript{85} The state district court where the foreclosure action is filed will schedule and oversee the settlement conference within sixty days after proof of service is filed with the court.\textsuperscript{86} The Bill specifically provides that the settlement conference is in place to determine if the parties can "reach a mutually agreeable resolution to help the defendant avoid losing his or her home, and evaluating the potential for a resolution in which payment schedules or amounts may be modified or other work out options may be agreed to."\textsuperscript{87}

The Bill also provides that any defendant appearing pro se will be deemed to have made a motion to proceed as indigent.\textsuperscript{88}

The aforementioned sections of the Bill will go into effect immediately, however, it should be noted that other sections of the Bill will not go into effect until 2009 or later.\textsuperscript{89}

5. Refusing Mandatory Arbitration Provision in Subprime Loans: Florida House Bill 979

Florida has been hard hit by the foreclosure crisis sweeping the nation. The state is second in the nation for the total number of foreclosures: there is one foreclosure for every ninety-five households in Florida.\textsuperscript{90} The situation is particularly severe in South Florida, where one in twenty-five homes is in foreclosure in St. Lucie County.\textsuperscript{91} Florida estimates that state revenues will be down $1.4 billion in 2008 and possibly down $2.5 billion next year.\textsuperscript{92}

The proposed Bill included several changes to the Florida Fair Lending Act,\textsuperscript{93} including a provision negating mandatory arbitration provisions in subprime loans. Subsection 14 of the proposed Bill stated:

No subprime home loan may be subject to a mandatory arbitration clause that limits in any way the right of the borrower to seek relief through the judicial process for any and all claims and defenses the borrower may have against the lender, broker, or other party involved in the loan transaction. 94

In addition to the mandatory arbitration clause provision, the Bill also attempted to address the concern with so-called balloon payments, where monthly mortgage payments increase dramatically after an initial introductory period of low payments. 95 In conjunction with the Bill, Florida Gov. Charlie Crist formed the Florida Home Ownership Promotes the Economy Task Force to address the foreclosure situation. 96

After introduction, H.B. 979 was referred to the Banking and Insurance Committee, the Commerce Committee, the Judiciary Committee, and General Government Appropriations Committee. On Apr. 15, 2008, H.B. 979 received a favorable vote by the Banking and Insurance Committee. However, H.B. 979 died in the Committee on Commerce on May 2, 2008. S.B. 2846 reached a similar fate on May 5, 2008. 97

6. Conclusion

The impact of the foreclosure crisis is broad and far-reaching. "One out of every seventeen mortgage holders is no longer able to make payments on time, the highest rate in over twenty years." 98 There are several proposed solutions to the foreclosure crisis and its subsequent impact on the economy at large. Though a significant portion of the news media's attention has focused on large federal bailouts and regulatory solutions, ADR provisions have also appeared in some state legislative proposals.

The proposed ADR solutions primarily focus on alleviating the pressure on consumers. By repealing or forbidding mandatory arbitration clauses in home loans, these state bills attempt to lower the pressure on homeowners and allow them a greater opportunity to make mortgage payments rather than face foreclosure. Similarly, the bills which invoke mediation and settlement procedures prior to foreclosure provide an opportunity for homeowners to restructure mortgage payments rather than go through foreclosure.

resolution procedures when negotiating a collective bargaining agreement.

Status: Signed by the Governor on Mar. 20, 2008.

1. Introduction

Delaware House Bill 283 adds dispute resolution procedures to the Public School Employment Relations Act ("PSERA") to cope with disputes arising in negotiating a collective bargaining agreement. Under current law, there are provisions for fact-finding, but these recommendations are not binding.99 Because the recommendations could be ignored, negotiations became a matter of who could hold out the longest.100 In Delaware, public school employees are prohibited from striking, so their employers could simply ignore the fact-finder’s recommendations, thereby leaving the employees with no remedy.101

House Bill 283 was introduced on Jan. 9, 2008, and was assigned to the Labor Committee in the House.102 Just one day later, on Jan. 10, the Labor Committee reported favorably and the Bill was sent back to the House floor.103 Two amendments, House Amendment One and House Amendment Two, were introduced and placed with the Bill.104 Amendment Two was passed, but Amendment One was stricken.105 With Amendment Two, the Bill passed the House overwhelmingly with forty yes votes, zero no votes, and one absent.106 In March, House Bill 283 was assigned to the Labor & Industrial Relations Committee in the Senate and reported favorably out of the committee.107 On Mar. 13, 2008, H.B. 283 passed the Senate with nineteen yes votes, one no vote, and one absent vote.108 One week later, it was signed into law by the Governor.109

2. The Bill

House Bill 283 struck and replaced Section 4002(j) of Title 14 of the Delaware Code in its entirety.110 The new procedure is called Binding Interest Arbitration ("BIA"); which is a procedure by which the "Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) shall make written findings of fact and a decision for final and binding resolution of an impasse arising out of collective bargaining."111 The Bill also amended several other sections and replaced various terms with phrases like “fact-finders” and “fact-finding.”

The crux of House Bill 283 struck and replaced Section 4015 of Title 14 in its entirety; this section actually details how the arbitration process works. The PERB must make a determination within seven days of receipt of a petition for BIA as to whether BIA would be appropriate and in the public interest. The Board appoints an arbitrator and he or she holds hearings in order to define the areas of dispute, determine facts, and render a decision. The arbitrator is even authorized to administer oaths and issue subpoenas on behalf of the parties. The arbitrator must specify the basis for his findings and take into consideration several factors listed under subsection (d).

The arbitrator must serve his written determination on the public school employer, the certified exclusive representative, and the Board within thirty days after the conclusion of the hearings, but not later than 120 days from the date of his appointment. The decision becomes an “Order of the Board” within five business days after it is served on the parties. The costs are to be split equally between the parties, and no part of this process shall be construed to prohibit any good-faith bargaining outside of the arbitration.

The arbitrator’s decision can be appealed like any order of the PERB to the Court of Chancery. The decision would then be reviewed like any other agency hearing decision—on the basis of being contrary to law or not supported by substantial evidence.

The Bill was amended by House Amendment Two, which deleted language in the synopsis that assumed public employers operate in bad faith by ignoring the recommendations of fact-finders. The amendment further clarified the applicability of the Bill to collective bargaining processes in progress at the time of its enactment. House Amendment One was struck and it provided the same changes as Amendment Two but, in addition, codified the PERB’s interpretation of FOP Lode 9 v. City of Seaford (IV PERB 2421, 2675 (2000)).

3. Conclusion

Without a final and binding dispute resolution procedure, public school employees were generally at a disadvantage in collective bargaining negotiations. This does not serve the public's interest of having the terms and conditions of employment resolved in an efficient and fair manner. With the more effective dispute resolution procedure provided by this Bill, both parties will have a much greater incentive to arrive at a voluntary agreement.

E. Dispute Resolution For Homeowners' Associations

Bill Number: Colorado House Bill 1135
Summary: Requires common interest communities to adopt and follow written policies governing the imposition of fines. Creates a fair and impartial method of determining whether a violation of the covenants actually occurred and provides the unit owner notice and an opportunity to be heard before an impartial decision-maker.
Status: Signed by the Governor on Apr. 21, 2008.

1. Introduction

More than 1.5 million Coloradans live in neighborhoods governed by Homeowners' Associations ("HOA"). In Colorado, Homeowners' Associations are governed by the Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act of Colorado's Revised Statutes. When a homeowner's property rights are violated by their HOA, often times, the existing statute provides homeowners with few options. As a result, Colorado House Bill 1135 was drafted to invalidate covenants that prohibit building modifications to accommodate persons with disabilities, to require due process in penalty assessment procedures, and to provide for alternative dispute resolution in this regard.

House Bill 1135 was introduced on Jan. 15, 2008, and was assigned to the House Committee on Local Government. On Jan. 22, 2008, the committee reported favorably with amendment. There was a second reading in the House of Representatives and the committee amendment was adopted. On Jan. 25, House Bill 1135 passed and was sent to the Senate. On Mar. 13, 2008, the Senate Committee on Local Government reported favorably with an amendment. The Senate had a second reading, adopted the amendment, and the Bill passed the Colorado House Bill 1135 amends Section 38-33.3-106.5(1) of the Colorado Revised Statutes through the addition of a new paragraph.\(^\text{136}\) It states that a Homeowner’s Association cannot prohibit reasonable modifications to a unit as necessary to afford a person with disabilities full use of the premises.\(^\text{137}\)

The Bill also provides for dispute resolution for Homeowners’ Associations under Section 38-33.3-209.5 of the Colorado Revised Statutes.\(^\text{138}\) The Bill changes Section 2 and states, “notwithstanding any provision of the declaration, bylaws, articles, or rules and regulations to the contrary, the association may not fine any unit owner for an alleged violation unless . . . ” the association meets several requirements listed in subsections (a) and (b).\(^\text{139}\) Subsection (a) states that association must adopt and follow a written policy governing the imposition of fines.\(^\text{140}\) Subsection (b) requires that the policy include a fair and impartial fact-finding process concerning the alleged violation.\(^\text{141}\) Also, the process must, at a minimum, guarantee the unit owner notice and an opportunity to be heard before an impartial decision-maker.\(^\text{142}\) Subsection (b) also defines an impartial decision-maker as "a person or group of persons who have the authority to make a decision regarding the enforcement of the association’s covenants, conditions, and restrictions . . . and do not have any direct personal or financial interest in the outcome."\(^\text{143}\)

Section 3 deals with costs and attorneys’ fees that arise out of the dispute resolution process.\(^\text{144}\) If the unit owner is not held responsible for the alleged violation, the association cannot allocate any costs or attorneys’ fees against the unit owner.

Colorado House Bill 1135 also amends Section 38-33.3-124 of the Colorado Revised Statutes.\(^\text{145}\) The statute previously stated that ADR is encouraged in homeowner disputes and the Bill adds that the General Assembly endorses and encourages associations, unit owners, and all related parties to make use of all available public and private resources for alternative dispute resolution. The statute already required associations to adopt a written policy setting forth a procedure to address disputes between parties, so this amendment just further encourages the use of ADR.

3. Conclusion

This Bill advances the use of alternative dispute resolution in Homeowners Association disputes and requires due process. Now, Homeowners Associations must create a fair and impartial method of dispute resolution to determine whether a covenant has been violated and unit owners must receive notice and an opportunity to be heard.

F. Peer Mediation Statutes: Slow Progress in Providing Safer School Environments: Florida Senate Bill 1068, Rhode Island House Bill 7569, Mississippi House Bill 1258, Tennessee Senate Bill 2921

Bill Numbers: Florida Senate Bill 1068 (companion House Bill 505); Rhode Island House Bill 7569, Mississippi House Bill 1258, Tennessee House Bill 2790 (companion Senate Bill 2921)

Summary: These bills provide various levels of requirement or encouragement for implementing peer mediation as a means of conflict resolution and violence prevention in elementary, middle, and secondary schools.

Status: Florida (died in Committee on Education Pre-K-12 on May 5, 2008); Rhode Island (effective without Governor’s signature on July 5, 2008); Mississippi (died in House Committee on Education on Feb. 19, 2008); Tennessee (signed by Governor on May 6, 2008).

1. Introduction

As concerns continue to mount over school violence, ADR practices have expanded beyond the legal system and branched out as a means of deterring violence among students. Educators’ concerns about school conflicts are valid. “One-half of all violence against teenagers occurred in school buildings, on school property, or on the street in the vicinity of a school.\textsuperscript{153} As a reaction, various groups have attempted to apply principles and methods of ADR in schools in order to curb school violence. One example of such a program is Project Outreach, formed by the American Bar Association ("ABA") "to reduce societal conflict and school violence through peer mediation programs."\textsuperscript{154}

With Project Outreach such a rousing success, the program received the ABA Section Officers Conference Meritorious Service Award, and has been praised by various local leaders as well as Former Attorney General Janet Reno and Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.\textsuperscript{155} With this well-publicized support and several other effective applications of schoolhouse ADR, states might benefit from enacting legislation both requiring and advocating the use of alternative dispute resolution in the elementary and secondary schools within their borders. This has not been the experience except in one state.

Peer mediation is based upon the classic premise of traditional mediation that "right may indeed exist on both sides."\textsuperscript{156} This focus on the equal value of each party's position achieves a solution that is satisfactory to both sides of the conflict.\textsuperscript{157} As a result, equal time, respect, and participation are allowed to both parties to a conflict.\textsuperscript{158} Peer mediation as it is applied to schools seeks to incorporate the tenets of mediation, but has students serve as the mediators instead of teachers, principals, or other authority figures.\textsuperscript{159} The purpose of training students to serve as mediators provides for a program that is "more equal and relevant" to students.\textsuperscript{160}

Like all mediation programs, participation in peer mediation is both voluntary and confidential.\textsuperscript{161} This, however, is almost universally met with the caveat that confidentiality fails if the information revealed pertains to either illegal or life threatening matters.\textsuperscript{162} During mediation sessions, students are encouraged to voice their concerns in a calm manner, thereby enabling them to explain to the other student the reasons for their actions.\textsuperscript{163} As a result, students are taught to resolve disputes in a peaceful manner and to tackle their problems "head on."\textsuperscript{164}

Decisions rendered at peer-mediation sessions are written by the students participating in the mediation.\textsuperscript{165} As a result, students are able to better understand their obligations under the agreement, as well as the fact that they will be bound by their agreed upon terms.166 Additionally, many peer mediation programs allow for subsequent mediations should one party breach the terms.167 This allows the success of the individual mediation agreement and, as a result, the entire peer mediation program lies solely in the hands of the participating students.168

Because of the various administrative levels where peer mediation programs may be instituted,169 it is difficult to pinpoint the exact number of conflict resolution or mediation programs in existence nationwide or how many states have schools participating in such a program.170 Some studies suggest that around 15,000 to 20,000 such programs are currently implemented in American schools.171

In spite of the positive results that peer mediation and other conflict resolution programs provide, state legislatures are still resistant to creating statewide programs providing for and/or requiring the implementation of such programs. Prior to the latest legislative sessions, only three states, Minnesota, North Carolina, and West Virginia required any form of conflict resolution among character development topics in primary or secondary education.172 This trend continues in 2008, as no other states have chosen to join them.

2. Florida House Bill 505/Senate Bill 1068

Proposed Florida House Bill 505 and Senate Bill 1068, had they passed, would have served as an amendment to Florida Statute 1003.42.173 Section 1003.42 details the required curriculum for schools in the State of Florida including not only the core course work in civics, history, math, and science, but also the requirements of character and health education.174 Specifically, the amendment was to add conflict resolution and the use of peer mediation as valuable lessons that must be taught to students in kindergarten through twelfth grade.175

The use of peer mediation in schools as a mandatory part of the school curriculum would demonstrate a strong commitment in Florida, not only to the prevention of violence in schools, but also to the success of ADR as a whole. Research demonstrates that students who are trained in the use of conflict resolution strategies, such as mediation, take their skills with them into adulthood and apply these skills to all conflicts they encounter.176 Participants in peer mediation programs have long advocated the benefits of peer mediation later on in life. 177 Encouraging for proponents of peer mediation, when programs are well run and adequately supported, many of them are successful as much as 93% of the time. 178 Additionally, research indicates that peer mediation programs result in improvements in the school environment and lower suspension rates. 179 Also, research suggests that the use of peer mediation results in an increase of positive attitudes toward resolving school discipline issues, a decrease in physical fights, and an increase in the self-esteem of the students participating in peer mediation. 180

By training their students in the use of peer mediation, Florida could have invested in the prevention of future conflicts and already begun training a future generation of mediators. For these reasons, the Florida Amendment was forward thinking in bringing peer mediation to its students.

3. Rhode Island House Bill 7569

Rhode Island was successful in amending its legislation to allow for the implementation of peer mediation for students. 181 However, unlike the failed Florida legislation which focused on curriculum, the Rhode Island statute focuses upon what the legislature deems to be acceptable student discipline. 182 As a result, the Rhode Island bill, rather than requiring or suggesting peer mediation or other conflict resolution methods, merely grants permission to use peer mediation as part of resolving student conflicts. 183

Though the Rhode Island Legislature should be praised for its specific mention of mediation, as well as for making some progress in the advancement of peer mediation, the lack of strong language seems to provide little incentive to schools in Rhode Island to actively invest in peer mediation for their students. 184

4. Mississippi House Bill 1258

The proposed legislation from the Mississippi House of Representatives regarding peer mediation and conflict resolution in schools died in committee. 185 However, unlike the Florida bill, the Mississippi bill was much less ambitious. Mississippi’s proposed legislation would have mandated that the Mississippi Department of Education develop guidelines to serve as a model for addressing the health needs of students. 186 This included a requirement of at least fifteen hours of instruction in what it has termed “core components.” 187 Conflict resolution is listed as one of the “core components” of this program, but peer mediation was never specifically mentioned.\textsuperscript{188} Thus, the State of Mississippi continues to provide little state assistance to schools attempting to incorporate ADR practices, such as peer mediation.

Some may view this as unfortunate because the ABA praises peer mediation for "allow[ing] all parties to share in the responsibility for the conflict and the solutions."\textsuperscript{189} Also, while schools vary as to what types of incidents are allowed to be handled by peer mediation, one of the key benefits of peer mediation is that it often allows schools to avoid serious discipline problems, including those leading to a student's suspension or expulsion.\textsuperscript{190} This is due to the fact that peer mediators are called upon most often to handle instances of arguing, teasing, rumors, ongoing animosity between students, bullying, and conflicts between couples.\textsuperscript{191} These are situations that, when allowed to simmer, can often boil over into full-scale disciplinary problems, often erupting into violence if left unchecked.\textsuperscript{192} Such problems might have been addressed had a stronger stance been taken by the Mississippi Legislature in favor of peer mediation and nonviolent conflict resolution.

5. Tennessee House Bill 2790

Tennessee amended its requirements for character education, which was initially written to require that all public school students from kindergarten through twelfth grade receive instruction in the use of nonviolence as a means of conflict resolution as part of the course on character education.\textsuperscript{193} This would be included in the specific curriculum of the state rather than the general quality standards that had existed previously.\textsuperscript{194}

However, before passage, the Bill was amended, changing the language from requiring nonviolent conflict resolution to merely urging that schools adopt nonviolent conflict resolution education, effectively removing all teeth from the Bill.\textsuperscript{195}

6. Conclusion

Conflict among students is a common occurrence in schools.\textsuperscript{196} Even worse, crime rates are currently rising among juveniles.\textsuperscript{197} Teenagers are now arrested for violent crimes more than young adults.\textsuperscript{198} The violent death rate for teens between fifteen and nineteen years of age is sixty-nine per 100,000. Homicide is the second leading cause of death for people aged fifteen to twenty-four. Additionally, research suggests that students not trained in effective conflict resolution strategies often use methods that do more harm than good by ignoring important factors such as maintaining relationships.

Support for peer mediation programs from students involved, both as mediators and disputants, administrators, and parents has been "overwhelmingly positive," yet government support for peer mediation for students is largely absent. Of the three states that include conflict resolution as a statutory requirement of character education, only North Carolina specifically requires mediation. This is surprising considering the fact that bills such as Florida’s proposed amendment have been deemed to have a minimal fiscal impact. Unfortunately, with no real records detailing why these bills failed or others do not exist, the reason for their absence is a mystery.

II. HIGHLIGHTS

A. Arizona House Bill 2845

Arizona House Bill 2845 adopts most of the Revised Uniform Arbitration Act ("RUAA") in an entirely new Chapter, 21, of Title 12 (courts and civil proceedings) of its code. Chapter 21 will have 29 subsections ranging from section 12-3001 (Definitions) to 12-3029 (Relationship to Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act). These subsections list arbitration-related definitions and provide requirements for notice, effect of arbitration agreements, application for judicial relief, validity of agreements to arbitrate, motions to compel, and several other arbitration related provisions. This bill is nearly identical to the RUAA, but changes some language and omits sections 31, 32, and 33.

The bill also modifies other parts of the Arizona Revised Statutes to recognize the new chapter. For instance, section 10-1806, settlements of arbitration disputes in close corporations, now mentions that Chapter 21 controls arbitration disputes to the extent the articles of incorporation do not provide otherwise. This bill also changes section 12-2101.01 to recognize that Chapter 21 will now govern appeals from arbitration awards. It also modifies section 41-2615, remedies for claims against the state or an agency of the state, to include Chapter 21.\textsuperscript{211}

B. California Assembly Bill 2641

On Feb. 22, 2008, Assembly Member Cook introduced Assembly Bill 2641 for the protection of military veterans.\textsuperscript{212} The bill would add section 395.6 to the Military and Veterans Code and require the Governor and each state agency to appoint an ombudsman to take and resolve complaints made by members of the California National Guard or other reservists.\textsuperscript{213} The purpose of the bill is to address complaints of violations of the Uniformed Service Employment and Reemployment Rights Act (38 U.S.C. § 4301) and issues relating to state pay.\textsuperscript{214} The ombudsman may only address complaints by state employees who are members of either the National Guard or a reserve component of the Armed Forces and who encounter problems regaining their state employment when they return from military service.\textsuperscript{215} The agencies must appoint ombudsmen to hear complaints, and the Governor can appoint ombudsmen to assist these agencies if necessary.\textsuperscript{216}

C. New Jersey Senate Bill 310

New Jersey Senate Bill 310\textsuperscript{217} was introduced on Jan. 8, 2008, to provide fair and efficient procedures for managing disputes between homeowners and their homeowner's associations.\textsuperscript{218} The bill requires that homeowners' association liens and disputes be reviewed by a volunteer arbitrator or mediator in a two-step process.\textsuperscript{219} S.B. 310 would allow homeowner’s association disputes to initially be processed through “preliminary ADR.”\textsuperscript{220} At this first level, a homeowner’s association may use a committee to resolve disputes as long as no one on the committee is also on the homeowner’s association board, no one on the committee is involved in the dispute, and all parties to the dispute agree to the use of the committee.\textsuperscript{221} If preliminary ADR fails to resolve the dispute, the matter moves to Level I ADR, which provides a volunteer to resolve the dispute.\textsuperscript{222} Homeowner’s associations that receive a favorable ruling from mediation or arbitration will be reimbursed for expenses by submitting the matter to the county recording office.\textsuperscript{223} The bill also provides for the training of volunteer mediators and arbitra-

It is important to note that this bill is a part of a package of proposed legislation; the bill will remain inactive until the enactment of companion legislation.

D. South Dakota House Bill 1095

The South Dakota Family Law Arbitration Act was introduced on Jan. 8, 2008, to provide arbitration to resolve disputes concerning alimony, child custody, and child support disputes. The bill aims to provide both a fair and efficient resolution to disputes that commonly arise out of divorce. The Family Law Arbitration Act governs all agreements to arbitrate such disputes entered into after Jan. 8, 2008, including arbitration agreements entered into before and after the dissolution of marriage. The bill also details a lengthy procedures and details concerning the arbitration process for family law disputes. The bill was passed by a vote of eleven to two on Jan. 16, 2008.

E. Tennessee House Bill 2538

Under current Tennessee law, courts are required to order the parties in divorce and separate maintenance cases to participate in mediation. This court-ordered mediation may be either waived or extended for various reasons. Waiver is granted if the court finds that either parent is unable to afford the costs of the proposed dispute resolution process, unless costs are waived or subsidized by the state, if the court enters a default judgment against the defendant, or if the court preempts the process upon a motion by either party for just cause. Tennessee House Bill 2538 provides for five criteria the court may consider in deciding to waive or extend mediation. They include: (1) if either party is unable to afford the cost of mediation unless the costs are waived or subsidized by the state, or if the cost of mediation would be an unreasonable burden on either or both of the parties; (2) the parties have entered into a written marital dissolution agreement or an agreed order resolving all pending issues in the divorce; (3) the parties have participated in a settlement conference; (4) the court finds a substantial likelihood that mediation will result in an impasse; and (5) other cause sufficiently found by the court. Additionally, the bill would remove the requirement that mediation be completed and a report filed with the court within 180 days from the date the divorce complaint was filed. The bill would apply to all divorce and separate maintenance cases where mediation has not been ordered prior to July 1, 2008.

F. Virginia House Bill 1131

Virginia House Bill 1131 would create the Office of the Children’s Ombudsman to provide ombudsman services to any child served by the “child-serving agencies” of Virginia. The head of the Office of the Children’s Ombudsman is appointed by the governor to a four-year term if confirmed by the General Assembly. The ombudsman’s operation and management the Office of the Children’s Ombudsman, includes making policy and reports and providing federal funding for the child services. Additionally, the ombudsman is tasked with the resolution of complaints against the “child-serving agencies” of Virginia. Specifically, the ombudsman will receive, investigate, and take all reasonable steps to mediate and resolve complaints regarding Virginia’s “child-serving agencies.” The ombudsman is responsible for conducting investigations of all of the Commonwealth’s child-serving agencies’ various facilities, and would receive full access to any and all documents needed for a full investigation of any complaint. Additionally, the ombudsman is authorized to enter into all necessary agreements with any relevant agency to ensure the protection of children. The ombudsman is also tasked with reporting to law enforcement, state’s attorneys, and the heads of any relevant agency any reasonable belief of a violation of state criminal law, and any serious problems, abuse, or deficiencies. This bill only becomes effective if the general funds effectuating the purposes of the act are passed by the 2008 Virginia General Assembly.

G. Hawaii House Bill 3245

Hawaii House Bill 3245 was introduced Jan. 23, 2008, to provide for the development of reports relating to the professional conduct and capacity of physicians and surgeons. Section 435-B of H.B. 3245 establishes a data repository that would create individual profiles on medical professionals. These profiles would be available for dissemination to the public. Among other things, H.B. 3245 would require medical professionals to report all medical malpractice court judgments as well as all medical malpractice arbitration awards in which a payment was awarded to a complaining party within the last ten years. Essentially, S.B. 3245 would make otherwise confidential and private arbitration award details available to the public.

H. Kansas Senate Bill 64

Kansas Senate Bill 64 was introduced on Mar. 11, 2008 in an effort to establish a family dispute resolution fund in the Kansas State Treasury. The fund would facilitate grants for the benefit of families in high conflict domestic cases. Such grants would assist the parties in finding the most appropriate method for the resolution of their disputes. The grants would fund programs that may include high conflict education courses, high conflict parenting plans, case management, child custody evaluations, neutral exchange sites, and other programs determined by the Kansas Supreme Court. Expenditures made from the fund must be approved by the Chief Justice of the Kansas Supreme Court, or by persons designated by the Chief Justice. The Chief Justice may apply for, and receive money from any source for inclusion in the fund. Grants would be made to programs based on the number of persons served and any additional requirements determined by the Kansas Supreme Court.
